Three Peculiarities

The superior qualities of Hood's Sarsaparilla are secured by three peculiarities, viz:

First.—The combination of remedial agents used.

Second.—The proportion in which they are mixed.

Third.—The process by which the active medicinal properties are secured.

These are peculiar to Hood's Sarsaparilla, and are unlike any other. The result of these peculiarities is a medicine of unusual strength, which effects cures hitherto unknown. Read, or even a glance at the article, inspires confidence, because it bears unquestionable evidence of a thorough understanding on the part of those who originated it.

Unknown To Others

"My little girl was afflicted with scrofula so virulent was the disease, that her neck had been lanced ten times. At the time she began to take Hood's Sarsaparilla, there was a very large bunch on her face. This we expected to open with the lancet; but to our surprise the bunch began to shrink, and now has entirely disappeared. She is in good health, and scarcely a sore. Her appetite is good, and she seems as well as any child." William H. Count, Lyme Centre, N. H.

Attest: I live neighbor to Mr. and Mrs. Count, and have always known them. The above statement is true. Theodore Balch.

Scrofula

Hood's Sarsaparilla will cure, when in the power of medicine, Scrofula, Salt Rheum, Dyspepsia, Headache, Constipation, Biliousness, General Debility, Pains in the Back, Kidney Complaint, Catarrh, Female Weaknesses, Cancerous Humors, Rumors of the Blood, Ringworm, Pimples, Syphilitic Affections, Ulcers, Boils, Tumors, Scald Head, etc. All diseases arising from an Impure State or low condition of the Blood.

"Appetite poor. Bowels in bad order, and always costive. Now feel in good health. Commenced taking Hood's Sarsaparilla, and with three bottles my sores healed, and I am at business again." H. Ambach, Chicago, Ill.

A REPUBLICAN STATE CONVENTION

—WILL BE HELD IN—

NORUMBEGA HALL, BANGOR,

Wednesday, April 9th, 1884, at 11 o'clock, A. M.,

for the purpose of nominating a candidate for Governor to be supported at the September election, and selecting two candidates for Electors of President and Vice President of the United States; also Delegates at large and four alternates to attend the National Convention to be held at Chicago, Illinois, on Tuesday, June 3, 1884, and transacting any other business that may properly come before it.

The basis of representation will be as follows: Each town and plantation will be entitled to one delegate, and for each 75 votes cast for Hon. Joseph R. Lunt for Governor in 1883, an additional delegate, and for a fraction of 40 votes in excess of 75 votes, an additional delegate.

The State Committee will be in session at the Norumbega Hall at the hour above mentioned for the purpose of receiving the credentials of delegates.

All citizens of Maine, without regard to past political differences, who are in favor of protecting and diversifying American labor, protecting and extending home and foreign markets, giving free play to ethnologic forces, the massing of brain, the coming free and foreign capital, an honest accounting of ballots, effectual protection of human rights, an honest administration of the General Government, a strict economy in the expenditure of public moneys, and the suppression of the present alarming tendency to centralization, are cordially invited to meet in their several towns and cities and select delegates to the convention.

The Republicans of the various Congressional districts shall have the option of electing their delegates to the convention by primary meetings called on similar notice and held in the several districts at any time within the fifteen days next prior to the meeting of the State Convention, or by such modes of the several districts as may be agreed upon at the meeting of the State Committee. If District delegates shall be elected by the officers of such District Conventions.

The delegates of all the aforesaid from each District, and from the District of Columbia, sitting in Chicago.

Notice of contests shall be given to the National Committee, in any mode by the National Committee, at the meeting of the Committee, which shall also be made public, and preferences in the order of hearing and determining of contests shall be by the Convention, according to the dates of the reception of such notices and statements by the National Committee.

Young and Brown stood, guarding the entry door, one in the pantry door, each with a gun aimed at my head. James Young came forward towards me threatening my life and demanding $30. I told him to go home, that he had already laid himself liable that I had treated him kindly, and that if he had anything to say to me to come the next day and say it. At this he said he would have me understand that he was not drunk but that he was after blood money. I saw that they meant to kill me. I seized my little boy's hatchet and rushed at Young. My wife caught my arm and prevented the blow. This gave Young a chance to get hold of the hatchet. We fell to the floor fighting. McKay, who had come in hearing Will Young tell his brother James to move off from me so that he could get aim, rushed at Will, felled him to the floor, seized the gun and came to my rescue. We soon cleared the room. Language cannot describe the scene. My wife's hand was cut with the hatchet, the table broken down, a kerosene lamp broken and set on fire, and one window broken out. The robbers fled leaving their hats behind. This all occurred in the few minutes succeeding my return home. ## Republican National Convention.

AT CHICAGO, JUNE 3d, 1884.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Dec. 12, 1883.

A National Republican Convention will meet at Chicago, Illinois, on Tuesday, June 3d, 1884, at 12 o'clock, noon, for the nomination of candidates to be supported for President and Vice President at the next election.

The Republican electors of the several States, and all loyal voters, without regard to past political differences, who are in favor of electing and dignifying labor, protecting and developing home and foreign commerce, securing to every citizen, without distinction of race, color or creed, the full measure of political rights guaranteed by the Constitution, and who desire to promote friendly feeling and fraternity throughout the land by establishing a National Government pledged to these objects and practices, are cordially invited to send, from each Congressional District two delegates and for each Representative at large, two delegates, to the Convention.

The Republicans of the various Congressional districts shall have the option of electing their delegates to the convention by primary meetings called on similar notice and held in the several districts at any time within the fifteen days next prior to the meeting of the State Convention, or by such modes of the several districts as may be agreed upon at the meeting of the State Committee. District Conventions, and each district entitled to eleven to the latter method of selection shall provide for the meeting of the State Committee. If District delegates shall be elected by the officers of such District Conventions.

The delegates of all the aforesaid from each District, and from the District of Columbia, sitting in Chicago.

Notice of contests shall be given to the National Committee, in any mode by the National Committee, at the meeting of the Committee, which shall also be made public, and preferences in the order of hearing and determining of contests shall be by the Convention, according to the dates of the reception of such notices and statements by the National Committee.

FATE OF CHARLEY McCOMAS.

Thought He was Murdered.

WASHINGTON, April 7. Information has been received at the headquarters of the Army, from the United States Consul, General at Matamoras concerning the Apaches ing Northern Mexico, which tends to strengthen the belief that little Charley McComas was killed by the captors. From talks with Apache squaws at Chihuahua, recently captured by Mexicans, there can be little doubt of it.

Jim Is said to be ... child alive, and with about twenty lodges is not over 100 miles north of Chihuahua. It is reported in that country that if General Crook had had supplies enough in his Mexican campaign to have remained in the mountains for a fortnight longer Jim and every Apache in those mountains would have come in.

THE STEAMER DISASTER.

A Terrible Loss of Life.

One Hundred And Twenty-Three Persons Drowned.

How the Survivors were Rescued.

A Graphic Account of the Wreck.

The Captain's Story.

BOSTON, April 5. A special to the Journal from Halifax says: Mr Chipman, agent of the White Cross line, who drove across the isthmus last evening, returned this morning and reports that the U. S. steamer Dispatch left Port Mulgrave at 8 a. m. yesterday with the survivors of the steamer Daniel Stebbins on board. The Dispatch has taken them as far as Pictou, and they will be transferred to the cars there. The Dispatch will probably reach Halifax this evening. Mr. Chipman says that Capt. Schoonhaven and the crew of the Stebbins speak in the highest terms of the kindness shown them by the people of Mulgrave. The following particulars of the wreck of the Stebbins are given by Capt. Schoonhaven:

The steamer left Boston on the morning of the 29th ult. for Halifax with a full cargo and passenger list. The passage was a very rough one, and the vessel was delayed by the storms, which were so severe that it was impossible to get any observations for two days, and we were compelled to run by the lead. At 10:30 on the third day we struck on what we first took to be Cape Canso, but finding nothing to answer to the description of that cape, we concluded that we had run by it in the fog, and that we were on the Nova Scotia coast, but could not have told where we were.

The vessel was headed for the Light House on Sambro and before we had time to get a pilot she struck on the island. The vessel struck on the island on the starboard side, and then began filling. We got the boats ready to run her ashore but she sank in a few minutes. As soon as she struck the captain ordered the passengers on deck, but they were all swept overboard and drowned by the heavy sea which swept over her. Two of the passengers and five of the crew got into the yawl and managed to reach the shore. The life boat drifted ashore first.

I stood by the wheel when it was washed away, at his post on the bridge, when the vessel went down, threw off his clothes and plunged into the water. I was washed on shore and took to the forward part of the vessel. The tide took faster than he could swim, and he was obliged to let himself float and drift with the tide. I saw Dowell's head, but could not reach him. I was compelled to let him go. I saw the captain on the bridge

The ordinary method of fastening glass in window-sashes is to lay in the glass without a putty bedding, secure it with small triangular bits of tin, then complete the operation by filling the outside of the sash-bar with putty, applied in slightly over the glass. When this method is applied to greenhouse roofs it causes a great amount of trouble to protect leakage. The presence of moisture, which is almost always to be found on the inside of the roof during cold weather, and the action of frosts and rains on the outside, find a tendency to loosen and destroy the putty, so that an annual overhauling is necessary to keep it in repair. But there are now very few greenhouses glazed in the above manner. The old plan has given place to a more permanent and more effectual system, so far as regards a tight roof. This plan consists in placing a layer of the best putty on the sash-bar, then pressing the pane of glass until it touches a firm, uniform bed, and so working up a portion of the putty that it will fill all spaces between the edge of the glass and the sash-bar. After the surplus putty is trimmed off, it is allowed to dry for a day or two, which will cause it to shrink slightly from the wood, then a coat of thick oil paint is applied, which effectually fills up all crevices, and makes a perfectly water-tight finish. No putty is used on the outside, and consequently there is no leakage from its decay; and instead of the fastenings the glass is secured by brad-nails three-fourths of an inch in length, four to each pane, fastened in the corners.

The popular method of roofing glass structures is what is known as the dwelling plan. In this plan no framed sashes are used, the rafters are placed about eight feet apart, their exact distance depending upon the size of the glass to be used for a roof job, the glass bar will come in the center of the rafter. Between the rafters horizontal purlines are inserted to support the sash-bars. The sash-bars are usually made an inch and a half in depth and one inch in width; these are fastened in parallel lines, their distance apart depending upon the size of the glass employed, after testing various-sized panes, the size 10 inches by 12 inches is generally preferred. For this size the sash-bars are placed 12½ inches apart, measuring from their outer sides, allowing one-fourth inch more for the glass to rest upon on each side. In setting panes of this size it is of some importance to place the concave surface uppermost, which makes the center of the pane the lowest point, so that the water which falls on the roof will be diverted from the sides to the center of the line of glass. The glass should not lap more than one-sixteenth of an inch, while laps hold dust, which, in turn, holds water, which may freeze in very cold weather and split the glass. The method of glazing roofs of living rooms is that without trouble from leakage. Ventilation is provided for by hinged sashes on the roof, which may be arranged in various ways to prevent them from leaking. The amount of ventilating space allowed will have some dependence upon the purposes to which the structure will be devoted.

The following paper was read last week at the meeting of the Penobscot Farmers' Club, at Venzie, by Master Nellie Murch, of Hampden, the youngest member of the Club:

Mr. President—Your question for discussion to-day, is, "Can it be made profitable for a farmer to raise poultry for the purpose of egg and chicken?" I think it can, for the good health of eggs and chickens is one of two for the production of chicken or eggs. I suppose that the majority of farmers here to-day would say, it cannot, but let me ask them one question. Have you ever tried it? If you have, tell us your experience. I, for one, want to hear it. If you have experimented with poultry in this town, in this and what success you have met with, so that we shall know how to take care of our poultry. Then I proceed to what question I want to go home to-night with. I rather know of poultry keeping than I come here with. I have tried poultry keeping for four years, and I have met with success so far. I will tell you now what experience I have had in poultry keeping, and what I think of poultry yard on a farm. In the year 1880 I got my father to give me a flock of hens which was about fifteen from one to fifteen years old, and I don't know but some might have been older, also, to build me a hen house, for I wanted a place to keep them. The first year I did not make much, the second year I did better, and the third year I started in free from debt. That year I kept account of what eggs my hens did and what food I gave them. I had a board placed and marked off and put in my hen house on which I kept account of my eggs every night, and at the end of the month I would set down the average price for that month, so at the end of the year I could tell just what my hens had done. I kept about thirty-five hens. That year I made nearly four dollars clear of every hen, not calling the droppings worth anything. I don't know how large an amount of droppings a flock of hens like that would make in a year, for I never have tried saving it by itself. I put straw or wood dust on the floor of the hen house, but straw on which I drop it, because the wood dust scattered into the food does not improve it, and as a general thing, if there is more long than they will eat up clean, they will scratch it full of litter, and if the food is soft waste a great deal, and I think unless you clean your hen house out often, straw is preferable to wood dust. I clean my hen house out once a month in the summer, and but once during the winter. I carry a basket full of straw in every week, and let them scratch it in and over the floor; there is almost always hay enough in the straw as they get all they need. If I used wood dust I should put some lime over how it. I laid it into my hen house every week, as the hens like the lime on it. They should also have a dust-bath. Keep dust from the road or ashes in my hens all the time. I never put sulphur into it because I don't think it does any good, the dust or ashes is what keeps lice off. If you take one of these large hens' face and examine its body you will find that it is full of little pores through which it breathes, as I am told. I never have tried anything in regard to it, but I have opinion that the hens have seen the poets, and when the hen burrows in the dust or ashes it fills these pores and stops its breath. I am told that all hen lice have the same method of breathing, and if so, I can't see why dust without sulphur is not just as good as dust with sulphur in it, as the dust is fine enough to penetrate these pores, and another thing that I can't see through, and that I should like to have some one here explain, is why giving a hen sulphur to eat should affect the lice on the outside of her skin. I should think that if sulphur is good for a hen, as all books everybody says, that it would be purifying her blood, and I should not think that purifying a hen's blood would kill the lice. Two years ago I read the following in the Home Farm. "Sure cure for hen lice.—Make a mud made of Graham flour in which a handful of sulphur has been mixed; the hens like it and are cured from lice and kept healthy through the season." I had occasion to buy some poultry that were quite lousy. One of them I kept to try this on, to see if it was as good as recommended. I fed the hen on the bread and kept it by her all the time, and at the end of one month she was as lousy that she could not stand and I chopped her head off. That convinced me that giving a hen sulphur to eat would not kill the lice. I give my hens sulphur once in a while because I think it is good for them, but don't think it rids them of any lice. I have kept hens, as I have told you before, for four years, and the last three years I have kept from sixty to one hundred hens in the same house. The house I believe is 12x20, and I never have lost a hen of my own by lice yet, and I never gave them one ounce of sulphur before last winter, and my hens were more healthy last winter than they were the winter before, nor were they quite so healthy, but I don't lay that to the sulphur. I think that it was because I forced them harder last winter than I did the winter before. Last winter I had sixty, about half of many as I had winter before last. They were nearly all pullets that I had last winter. Some of the pullets began to lay the last of October, and through November, December, January and February, they averaged about two and one-half dozen eggs per day. That was doing better than any flock of hens that I have heard of yet. Winter before last I had about one hundred and twenty, and in three months I made, clear from all expenses, eighty dollars. I think that a farmer ought to raise his own poultry. I will tell you what experience I have had in hatching; declension I know nothing about. A farmer of course, would not want incubator for his own use. I have set hens on straw, hay, wood-dust and dirt and prefer the latter. I always used to set my hens in the hen-house, slatting off one end and confining it. I tried putting them in the nests that they layed in, would never for me find the floor; some were on the floor and I tried setting them in barrels with horse manure in the bottom and straw on top, kept their food in the room where I set them and let them come off and eat when they wanted to, but think that is a poor plan for the best setting does not hatch very well and general thing, and then it hurries them to eat so long, and it will take a long while to get her to laying again. After my chickens get to be eight or ten weeks old I separate the cockerels and pullets, and feed them something different. When my pullets get to be three months old I feed some meat. You can lose nothing by feeding your pullets when they are young. Don't let them scratch their own living—they will get fat that there is to be had just the same if you feed them. I will close by saying that I think the best strains for farmers to keep are the small strains, with the exception of the Plymouth Rock.

Advertising Cheap!!!

It has become so common to overdo the Legitimate of an article, in an elegant, inspiring manner.

Then run it into some advertisement that you would not such.

And simply call attention to the merits of Hop Bitters in as plain, honest terms as possible.

To induce people

To give them one trial, which is sufficient, their value that they will never use any thing else.

The REMEDY so favorably noticed in all the papers.

Religious and secular, is

Having a large sale, and is supplanting all other medicines.

There is no denying the virtues of the Hop plant, and the proprietors of Hop Bitters have shown great shrewdness

In Availability

In compounding a medicine whose virtues are palpable to every one's observation.

DYE SEE PIX?

No!

She lingered and suffered along, pining away all the time for years,

The doctors doing her no good,

And at last was cured by this Hop Bitters the papers say so much about.

Indeed! Indeed!

Think thankful we should be for that medicine

A DAUGHTER'S MISERY.

Eleven years our daughter suffered on a bed of misery,

From a complication of kidney, liver, stomach trouble and Nervous debility,

Under the care of the best physicians,

Who gave her disease various names,

But no relief,

And now she is restored to us in good health by the simple a remedy as 'Hop Bitters' that we had shunned for years before using it.—The Parents.

FATHER IS GETTING WELL.

My daughters say:

How much better father is since he used Hop Bitters."

He is getting well after his long suffering from a disease declared incurable"

And we are so glad that he used your Bitters and took only Six Bottles.
